

MAR 24 1976

MICHAEL RODAN, JR., CLERK

In the Supreme Court
OF THE
United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1975

No. 75-1362

EDMUND J. OLSEN,
Petitioner,

VS.

THE PEOPLE OF THE TERRITORY OF GUAM,
Respondent.

PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI
to the United States Court of Appeals
for the Ninth Circuit

HOWARD TRAPP,
Post Office Box 3367,
Agana, Guam 96910,
Attorney for Petitioner.

Subject Index

	Page
Opinions below	1
Jurisdiction	2
Question	2
Statutes involved	2
48 U.S.C. § 1423a	2
48 U.S.C. § 1424(a)	2
Guam Code Civ. P. § 51	3
Guam Code Civ. P. § 62	4
Guam Code Civ. P. § 82	4
Statement of case	5
Nature of case	5
Disposition in district court	6
Agana Bay Dev. Co. (Hong Kong) Ltd. v. Supreme Court of Guam, No. 75-1059 (9th Cir., Jan. 14, 1976) (footnotes by court of appeals)	7
The question whether the local law creating the Supreme Court of Guam is consistent with the Federal Organic Act of Guam is of such impera- tive public importance as to require immediate settlement in this court	28
a. The number of appeals pending in the Appellate Division of the Federal District Court of Guam is thirty-nine	28
b. An additional thirty-nine appeals are pending in the Supreme Court of Guam	29
c. Only this court can end Guam's judicial chaos..	30
d. The petition for rehearing the Agana Bay case was denied	32
e. The decision in Agana Bay makes prosecuting the present case in the Court of Appeals an exercise in futility	33
f. Review of the Agana Bay case in this court will not be sought	33
g. Agana Bay holds that the Guam Legislature has abolished this court's jurisdiction to review Guam cases	34
Conclusion	34

Table of Authorities Cited

Cases	Pages
Agana Bay Dev. Co. (Hong Kong) Ltd. v. Supreme Court of Guam, No. 75-1059 (9th Cir. Jan. 14, 1976)	7, 32, 33, 34

Statutes

Guam Code of Civil Procedure:
Section 51	3
Section 62	4
Section 82	4
28 U.S.C.:
Section 1254(1)	2
Section 2101(e)	2
48 U.S.C.:
Section 1423a	2
Section 1424(a)	2

In the Supreme Court

OF THE

United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1975

No.

EDMUND J. OLSEN,
Petitioner,

VS.

THE PEOPLE OF THE TERRITORY OF GUAM,
Respondent.

PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI
to the United States Court of Appeals
for the Ninth Circuit

Petitioner respectfully prays that a writ of certiorari issue to review the order of dismissal of the appellate division of the federal District Court of Guam entered in this case on March 9, 1976.

OPINIONS BELOW

No opinion has been delivered in any court below.

JURISDICTION

An order of dismissal for want of jurisdiction made by the appellate division of the federal District Court of Guam was entered on March 9, 1976. On March 10, 1976, petitioner appealed from the order of dismissal. On March 17, 1976, his appeal was docketed in the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit as No. 76-1557, and the clerk filed the record on appeal on March 18, 1976. No judgment or decree has yet been rendered in the court of appeals, and jurisdiction to review this case by writ of certiorari before judgment is given in the court of appeals is conferred on this court by 28 U.S.C. §§ 1254(1), 2101(e).

QUESTION

Is the local law creating the Supreme Court of Guam consistent with the federal Organic Act of Guam?

STATUTES INVOLVED

48 U.S.C. § 1423a:

The legislative power of Guam shall extend to all subjects of legislation of local application not inconsistent with the provisions of this Act and the laws of the United States applicable to Guam.

48 U.S.C. § 1424(a):

There is hereby created a court of record to be designated the "District Court of Guam," and the judicial authority of Guam shall be vested in the District Court of Guam and in such court or courts as may have been or may hereafter be established by the laws of Guam. The District Court of Guam shall have the jurisdiction of a district court of the United States in all causes arising under the Constitution, treaties, and laws of the United States, regardless of the sum or value of the matter in controversy, shall have original jurisdiction in all other causes in Guam, jurisdiction over which has not been transferred by the legislature to other court or courts established by it, and shall have such appellate jurisdiction as the legislature may determine. The jurisdiction of and the procedure in the courts of Guam other than the District Court of Guam shall be prescribed by the laws of Guam. Appeals to the District Court of Guam shall be heard and determined by an appellate division of the court consisting of three judges, of whom two shall constitute a quorum. The judge appointed for the court by the President shall be the presiding judge of the appellate division and shall preside therein unless disqualified or otherwise unable to act. The other judges who are to sit in the appellate division at any session shall be designated by the judges assigned to the court from time to time pursuant to section 24(a) of this Act. The concurrence of two judges shall be necessary to any decision by the District Court of Guam on the merits of an appeal but the presiding judge alone may make any appropriate orders with respect to an appeal for want of jurisdiction or failure to take or prosecute it in accordance with the applicable law or rules of procedure.

Guam Code Civ. P. § 51:

The Courts of justice of the territory of Guam consist of the Supreme Court and the Superior Court.

Guam Code Civ. P. § 62:

The Supreme Court shall have jurisdiction of appeals from the judgments, orders, and decrees of the Superior Court in criminal cases . . . and in civil causes and proceedings The Supreme Court shall have jurisdiction of all appeals arising from the judgments, final decrees or final orders of the Superior Court or any division thereof.

Guam Code Civ. P. § 82:

The Superior Court shall have original jurisdiction in all cases arising under the laws of Guam, civil or criminal, in law or equity, regardless of the amount in controversy, except for causes arising under the Constitution, treaties or laws of the United States, and any matter involving the Guam Territorial income tax.

STATEMENT OF CASENature of case.

In the Superior Court of Guam
Criminal No. 84F-75

The People of the Territory of Guam,	} Plaintiff,
vs.
Edmund J. Olsen,	} Defendant.

[Filed Oct. 28, 1975]

NOTICE OF APPEAL

Notice is hereby given that defendant hereby appeals to the District Court of Guam and to the Supreme Court of Guam and to each of them from the final judgment entered in this proceeding on the 28th day of October, 1975.

Dated at Agana, Guam, this 28th day of October, 1975.

/s/ Edmund J. Olsen
Edmund J. Olsen

Disposition in district court.

In the District Court of Guam
Appellate Division
Undocketed

The People of the Territory of Guam, vs. Edmund J. Olsen,	}	Plaintiff-Appellee, Defendant-Appellant.
--	---	--

[Filed March 9, 1976]

ORDER

On authority of Agana Bay Development Co. (Hong Kong) Ltd. v. Supreme Court of Guam, No. 75-1059 (9th Cir., Jan. 14, 1976),

IT IS ORDERED that this appeal be and the same hereby is dismissed for lack of jurisdiction.

Dated at Agana, Guam, this 9th day of March, 1976.

/s/ Cristobal C. Duenas,
Cristobal C. Duenas, Judge,
District Court of Guam

Agana Bay Dev. Co. (Hong Kong) Ltd. v. Supreme Court of Guam, No. 75-1059 (9th Cir., Jan. 14, 1976) (footnotes by court of appeals):

United States Court of Appeals
for the Ninth Circuit
No. 75-1059

Agana Bay Development Company (Hong Kong) Ltd., vs. Supreme Court of Guam, Dillingham Corporation of the Pacific,	}	Petitioner-Appellee, Respondent-Appellant, Real Party in Interest.
---	---	--

[January 14, 1976]

Appeal from the District Court of Guam
in and for the Territory of Guam

OPINION

Before: CARTER, GOODWIN and KENNEDY,
Circuit Judges.

JAMES M. CARTER, Circuit Judge.

In this case we hold that the Territory of Guam is authorized to eliminate the appellate jurisdiction of the District Court of Guam, pertaining to local, non-federal issues, by transferring that jurisdiction to a court created by the territorial legislature. The Court Reorganization Act, Guam Public Law 12-85 (January 16, 1974), changes the designation of the principal local court created by the Territory from "Island Court" to "Superior Court." The Act also creates a Supreme Court of Guam and provides, effective July 1, 1974, that the supreme court has exclusive jurisdiction of appeals from the superior court. Formerly, all appeals from the Island Court had been taken to an appellate division of the District Court of Guam.

Agana Bay Development Company, a petitioner in this action, was the defendant in a prior suit commenced in the superior court, concerning the validity of certain liens asserted by plaintiff Dillingham Corporation of the Pacific. Partial summary judgment was granted for the defendant Agana Bay, and Dillingham appealed to the Supreme Court of Guam. Agana Bay then filed this action in the District Court of Guam, seeking a Writ of Prohibition directing the supreme court to cease all appellate proceedings in the mechanics lien case. In the district court proceedings the respondent supreme court was represented by the Attorney General of Guam.

The district court issued a peremptory Writ of Prohibition pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1651, permanently restraining the Supreme Court of Guam from proceeding further on the appeal of the mechanics lien case. The court also held invalid those portions of the Court Reorganization Act which divested the district court of its appellate jurisdiction and which created the Supreme Court of Guam. The respondent supreme court now appeals to this court, which has jurisdiction of appeals from all final decisions of the District Court of Guam. 28 U.S.C. §§ 1291, 1294(4).

As an unincorporated territory of the United States, Guam is subject to the plenary authority of Congress to provide for its government under article IV, section 3 of the United States Constitution. Guam acquired its present status as an organized territory in 1950 when Congress enacted the Organic Act of Guam. Ch. 512, 64 Stat. 384. That statute established a territorial government with an elected legislature and a governor appointed by the President. In 1968 the Organic Act was amended to provide for local election of the Governor. Pub. L. No. 90-497, 82 Stat. 842. Even in its original form, the Organic Act delegated a large measure of self-government to the people of Guam. It has functioned as a constitution for Guam, outlining the scope of the territorial government's authority. And the territorial government of Guam can act only to the limits of that Organic Act, just as the national government must observe the limits of the Constitution. Bordenelli v. United States, 233 F.2d 120, 122 (9 Cir. 1956).

The provisions of the Organic Act of 1950 established a judicial system for Guam but also gave the territorial government significant responsibility for adapting that system to its changing needs. Section 22 of the Organic Act established the "District Court of Guam" as a court of record, with original jurisdiction both in cases arising under federal laws and in all other cases, and appellate jurisdiction as to local, non-federal issues, as determined by the Guam Legislature. The legislature was also given power to create other courts and define their procedure and jurisdiction, and to transfer original jurisdiction from the district court to these other courts, except in cases arising under federal law. Section 23 provided for appeals to the Ninth Circuit and Supreme Court from certain decisions of the District Court of Guam. Section 24 provided for the appointment of the district judge for a limited term and also allowed the assignment of federal judges to the district court when necessary for the proper dispatch of its business.

Pursuant to the authority delegated in the Organic Act, the first Guam Legislature in 1951 adopted implementing legislation for the territorial judicial system, Public Law 17. The provisions of this act remained substantially unchanged through 1973.¹ Basically, they provided a judicial system with four tiers of courts. Commissioners' courts had original jurisdiction over petty criminal cases under local law. Guam Code Civ. Proc. § 112 (1970). The police court had original jurisdiction of certain misdemeanor criminal cases under local law, and appellate jurisdiction for de novo determination of cases decided by the commissioners' courts. Id. §§ 102, 104. The Island Court was a court of record with original jurisdiction, exclusive of the district court, in specified matters arising under local laws; these causes generally included misdemeanor criminal offenses, domestic relations, probate, and civil cases where less than $5,000 was in controversy. Id. § 82. The Island Court also had appellate jurisdiction over judgments of the police court imposing imprisonment or a fine in excess of $25. Id. § 83. The District Court of Guam retained its original jurisdiction over cases arising under local laws except those over which such jurisdiction was transferred to the Island Court by section 82. The appellate jurisdiction of the district court was defined to include a broad range of decisions of the Island Court in both civil and criminal cases. Id. § 63.²

¹See Pub. L. No. 29, 2d Guam Legis., Guam Code Civ. Proc. §§ 51-278 (1953) (new enactment of civil procedure code); Guam Code Civ. Proc. §§ 51-282 (1970 & Supp. 1973). Major changes occurring after the adopting of Public Law 17 include: the addition in 1952 of Title V on the juvenile court, id. §§ 250-82; changes in the method of appointing and removing territorial judges, id. §§ 81, 90-99; alterations in the police court's jurisdiction, id. §§ 101-03; and changes regarding the Judicial Council of Guam, id. §§ 121-23.

At the very outset it appeared Guam did not desire appeals from local courts to be heard by a single district judge. Public Law 17 stated that the District Court of Guam should exercise its appellate jurisdiction in a division consisting of the district judge as presiding judge and two other judges appointed by him from among the judges designated pursuant to ²Section 63 refers to other provisions of Guam law to define specific rights of appeal. See, e.g., Guam Penal Code §§ 1237-38 (rights of appeal in criminal cases; defendant may appeal from any final judgment of conviction); Guam Code Civ. Proc. § 936 (all others in civil cases are appealable unless expressly made final elsewhere). In Bank of America v. Webster, 439 F.2d 691 (9 Cir. 1971), we held that § 63, containing a specific enumeration of appealable cases, controlled the more general language of § 936 in affirming the district court's refusal of jurisdiction for an attempted appeal from a writ of execution issued in supplementary proceedings after a default judgment.

section 24 of the Organic Act.³ This provision was understood as an implementation of section 22(a) of the Organic Act. See Eiban v. Government of Guam, 115 F.Supp. 519, 520-21 (D. Guam, App. Div. 1953).

Major changes were made in the Guam judicial system when the Court Reorganization Act was adopted in 1974. The chapter of the Civil Procedure Code dealing with the District Court of Guam was repealed. A new chapter was adopted in its place, establishing a Supreme Court of Guam with essentially the same appellate jurisdiction as previously held by the district court over local, non-federal issues. The Act also created a Superior Court of Guam to replace the former Island, police, and commissioners' courts. The superior court was made a court of general original jurisdiction in all cases arising under the laws of Guam, but not for cases arising under federal law or pertaining to the Guam territorial income tax.⁴

³Section 24 originally authorized the Chief Justice of the United States to assign federal judges to the District Court of Guam when "necessary for the proper dispatch of the business of the court." In 1958 this section was amended to authorize the Chief Judge of the Ninth Circuit, in addition, to designate federal judges from the Ninth Circuit and judges of the Island Court of Guam or the High Court of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands. Pub. L. No. 85-444, 72 Stat. 179.

⁴Since the Court Reorganization Act repealed the former provisions of the Code dealing with the original jurisdiction of the district court and the Island Court, Guam Code Civ. Proc. §§ 62, 82 (1970), there is no express provision that the superior court's original jurisdiction is to be exclusive of the district court. However, the district court only has original jurisdiction in cases other than federal questions, if not "transferred" to courts created by the Guam Legislature, 48 U.S.C. § 1424(a) (1975). It appears that the Court Reorganization Act intended to transfer exclusive jurisdiction of all local matters, including serious criminal offenses and civil cases with more than $5,000 in controversy, to the superior court.

The intent of the Court Reorganization Act was presumably to establish for Guam a local judicial system independent of the federal courts. The question raised on this appeal is whether Congress has authorized Guam to undertake such a reorganization, when the effect is to divest the District Court of Guam of its appellate jurisdiction as to local, non-federal questions. The language of section 22 of the Organic Act is most pertinent to this inquiry:

"There is created a court of record to be designated the 'District Court of Guam,' and the judicial authority of Guam shall be vested in the District Court of Guam and in such court or courts as may have been or may hereafter be established by the laws of Guam. The District Court of Guam shall have the jurisdiction of a district court of the United States in all causes arising under the Constitution, treaties, and laws of the United States, regardless of the sum or value of the matter in controversy, shall have original jurisdiction in all other causes in Guam, jurisdiction over which has not been transferred by the legislature to other court or courts established by it, and shall have such appellate jurisdiction as the legislature may determine. The jurisdiction of and the procedure in the courts of Guam other than the District Court of Guam shall be prescribed by the laws of Guam."

The first sentence of section 22 states that the judicial power in Guam shall reside in a "district court" and in "such court or courts as may have been or may hereafter be established by the laws of Guam." The authority given to the Guam legislature is not limited to creating inferior courts.

The overstuffed sentence which follows has to be read in light of the power Congress has just given the Guam legislature to establish its own courts. When so read, it appears that Congress intended the following: First, with respect to federal cases, it tracked the jurisdiction of the district court to Article Three of the United States Constitution [The judicial Power shall extend to all Cases, in Law and Equity, arising under this Constitution, the Laws of the United States, and Treaties made] U.S. CONST. art. III, § 2]. Second, as to local, non-federal cases, it gave the district court original jurisdiction in all "other causes" until the Guam Legislature provides otherwise under the power created in the first sentence. Third, it let the district court "have" such appellate jurisdiction as the legislature may determine. This third clause says that the Legislature can give appellate jurisdiction to the Guam District Court. By the same token it would seem to follow that what it can give, it can take away and transfer to its own courts, which courts it was empowered to create.

It is not significant that section 22 expressly states that original jurisdiction of non-federal cases may be transferred to other courts, but the section does not expressly state that appellate jurisdiction may also be transferred. This sentence in section 22 is part of the Organic Act of 1950, 48 U.S.C. §§ 1421-24 (1975), which established the territorial government for Guam. At that time Congress apparently presumed that Guam would subsequently create its own inferior courts for non-federal matters, but would give appellate jurisdiction over these inferior courts to the district court. In fact, appellate jurisdiction was given by the Legislature to the district court for twenty-three years. The long standing existence of appellate jurisdiction in the district court compelled the creation of the procedures in the 1958 amendment to 48 U.S.C. § 1424(b) (1975).

However, the granting of appellate jurisdiction by the Guam Legislature to the district court was not compelled by the statute. To the contrary, the creation of Guam's own court system was authorized. We conclude that Guam's power to transfer appellate jurisdiction to its own Supreme Court arises from its power to create appellate courts and its power to determine the appellate jurisdiction of the district court as to local, non-federal questions. We hold that Congress authorized the Legislature to create, for non-federal questions, any kind of appellate system it saw fit.

We also note that no procedure is given for review or appeal of Guam appellate courts decisions to an Article Three Court. However, even before the creation in 1974 of the Guam Supreme Court, the Guam Legislature had the power to determine the extent of appellate jurisdiction by the district court over Guam inferior courts. 48 U.S.C. § 1424(a) (1975). Thus before 1974 the legislature could extinguish the right to appeal to an Article Three Court.

Also, it is well established that a right of appellate review is statutory, did not exist at common law, and is not required by the United States Constitution. Francisco Enterprises, Inc. v. Kirby, 482 F.2d 481, 484 (9 Cir. 1973), citing Griffin v. Illinois, 351 U.S. 12, 18 (1955). Furthermore, if the hiatus in appellate review needs to be filled, Congress can provide for it; in fact, a bill to that effect has been introduced in Congress. H.R. 4581, 94th Cong., 1st Sess. (March 10, 1975).

We do not base our opinion on Corn v. Guam Coral Co., 318 F.2d 622 (9 Cir. 1963). In Corn we ruled that the 1958 amendments to the Organic Act did not create a new appellate body, but only formalized the appellate procedures already enacted by the Guam Legislature in 1951. Congress recognized that Guam had validly exercised its powers in creating appellate jurisdiction in the district court over local, non-federal, cases.

However, Corn did not hold that Guam could have independently created its own appellate courts which were not subject to review by the district court. Such an issue was not reached in Corn. Therefore we find Corn not on point and instead rely on the language in the Organic Act, 48 U.S.C. § 1424(a) (1975).

The lower court in this case relied on "congressional intent" in finding the 1974 legislation establishing a Guam supreme court invalid. It stated that prior to enacting the Organic Act in 1950, the United States House of Representatives considered a bill which would have provided Guam with a supreme court whose decisions would have been appealable to an Article Three Court. See 2 U.S. Cong. Serv. 2840, 2847 (1950). As stated in a letter of May 3, 1949, from the Secretary of the Interior to the President of the Senate, "[t]he judicial branch would consist of a supreme court, with a single justice appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate for a 6-year term and of such inferior courts as the legislature might create." [Emphasis added]. See 2 U.S. Code Cong. Serv. 2847 (1950), letter from J. A. Krug, Secretary of the Interior to the Hon. Alben W. Barkley, President of the Senate.

This bill was relied upon by the district court for the proposition that, "Congress intended to supervise the judicial branch of government in Guam." However, when the Organic Act was finally passed by Congress, the provisions relating to a Congressionally created supreme court were eliminated.⁵ The refusal to enact the bill leads to an interference directly contrary to that drawn by the district court—that is, Congress did not intend to prohibit the creation by Guam of appellate courts nor did Congress intend to retain control over Guam's appellate courts with respect to local, non-federal cases.

A comparison of Guam with other territories shows that the Guam Organic Act is unique and it delegates the widest powers of any of the territories to the legislature for the creation of appellate courts. For example, prior to statehood, Alaska had no supreme court. The judicial authority was vested in district court. Act of June 6, 1900, c. 786 § 4, 31 Stat. 322; 48 ⁵When the companion bill to H.R. 7273, S. 1892, came before the United States Senate, amendments were proposed which abandoned the concept of a congressionally created Supreme Court of Guam. The Senate adopted the amendments. Then the House of Representatives concurred in the amendments. See 2 U.S. Code Cong. Serv. 2840, 2842 (1950).

U.S.C. § 101 (1952). Alaska could not create courts which were independent of those created by Congress and from which there was neither appeal nor supervision. In re Munro, 1 Alaska 279, 285 (1909).

For the Territory of Hawaii, the judicial power was vested in "one supreme court, circuit courts, and such inferior courts as the legislature may from time to time establish." (emphasis added) April 30, 1900, c. 330, § 81, 31 Stat. 157; 48 U.S.C. § 631 (1952). The Hawaiian Legislature had no authority to create any but inferior courts. Territory v. Miguel, 18 Hawaii 402, 404 (1907). Other provisions of the Act of 1900 governed the appointment, tenure, and salaries of the judges on the supreme court. See 48 U.S.C. §§ 632-34 (1952).⁶

Under the first organic act of Puerto Rico, a supreme court was provided for; the justices were appointed by the President. Act of April 12, 1900, c. 191, § 33, 31 Stat. 84.⁷ A second organic act created a United States District Court. The district court did not have appellate jurisdiction over local courts, but ⁶48 U.S.C. §§ 632 and 633 (1952), relating to the appointment of the justices by the President, were omitted when Hawaii became a state. The Constitution of Hawaii, art. V, § 3 (1959), provides for the appointment of the justices by the governor, with the advice and consent of the Hawaiian Senate.

Sections 634 and 634a of 48 U.S.C. (1952), relating to the salaries of the justices, were expressly repealed by Pub. L. 86-3, § 14(e), Mar. 18, 1959, 73 Stat. 10, effective upon the admission of the state of Hawaii into the Union. Under the Constitution of Hawaii, art. V, § 3, the compensation is to be prescribed by law. See 2 U.S. Code Cong. and Admin. News, 86th Cong., 1st Sess., 1375, 1385 (1959).

⁷See 2 U.S. Code Cong. and Admin. News, 1892 (1952). This section, as amended was repealed by the Act of July 3, 1950, c. 446, § 5(2), 64 Stat. 320, eff. July 25, 1952. A Constitution of the Com-did have jurisdiction over local matters involving non-residents. Act of March 2, 1917, c. 145, § 41, 39 Stat. 965, as amended; 48 U.S.C. § 863 (1952). The legislature of Puerto Rico could not alter the jurisdiction of the district court. Id., § 40; 48 U.S.C. § 861 (1952).

For the Virgin Islands the judicial power is vested in a district court and "in such court or courts of inferior jurisdiction as may have been or may hereafter be established by local law." 48 U.S.C. § 1611 (1975). The district court was expressly given "appellate jurisdiction to review the judgments and orders of the inferior courts." 48 U.S.C. § 1612 (1975).

In contrast is Guam. Congress has not created a supreme court, nor has it acted to regulate any such court which Guam may create. In Hawaii and Puerto Rico, on the other hand, Congress has regulated the appointment, tenure, and salaries of supreme court justices.

Secondly, Guam was given the power to create a court system and was not limited to creating "inferior" courts. This is in contrast to the Virgin Islands and Hawaii, which were, or are, so limited.

Thirdly, Guam was expressly given the power to extinguish the appellate jurisdiction of the district court over local courts, with respect to local, non-federal, cases. In contrast, no other territory was given such power.

monwealth of Puerto Rico was ratified by Congress by Joint Resolution, July 3, 1952, c. 567, 66 Stat. 327. Under the Constitution of Puerto Rico, art. V, § 8 (1952), the judges of the supreme court are appointed by the governor, with the advice and consent of the senate.

We therefore draw the inference that had Congress intended to prohibit the creation of appellate courts or to bar the transferring of appellate jurisdiction from the district court, Congress could have clearly stated as much or could have patterned Guam after the other territories.

We believe that the policy of leaving local matters to courts created by local legislatures is a sound one. Twenty-five years have passed since Guam was an "underdeveloped and isolated possession of the United States", as described by the district court. There is nothing to indicate that Guam is incapable of establishing and operating its own appellate court with respect to purely local matters. There is nothing in the language or legislative history of the Organic Act requiring the interpretation that the district court must be the highest and only appellate court in Guam. Rather, the only language pertaining to appellate courts grants the Guam Legislature total authority to transfer appellate jurisdiction over local, non-federal cases from the district court to Guam courts.

REVERSED.

KENNEDY, Circuit Judge, Dissenting.

In my view the Organic Act of Guam does not authorize the territorial legislature to transfer the appellate jurisdiction of the District Court of Guam to a locally-created court. Thus I would affirm the judgment of the district court.

This case presents a difficult question of statutory interpretation, primarily involving the following convoluted sentence in section 22(a) of the Organic Act:

The District Court of Guam shall have the jurisdiction of a district court of the United States in all causes arising under the Constitution, treaties, and laws of the United States, regardless of the sum or value of the matter in controversy, shall have original jurisdiction in all other causes in Guam, jurisdiction over which has not been transferred by the legislature to other court or courts established by it, and shall have such appellate jurisdiction as the legislature may determine.

48 U.S.C. § 1424(a). By this language the Act vests in the district court original jurisdiction of federal question cases and all local matters in Guam. It also provides that the territorial legislature can divest the district court of some or all of its original jurisdiction over local matters by transferring that jurisdiction to locally-created courts, thereby allowing the local judicial system to expand its capability as litigation increases. The district court would then have appellate jurisdiction over such cases as determined by the legislature.

My brothers acknowledged that section 22(a) does not explicitly authorize Guam to transfer the district court's appellate jurisdiction to a local court. However, they find such a transfer included within the legislature's power to "determine," and thus to extinguish, the appellate jurisdiction of the district court. Moreover, section 22(a) literally empowers the territorial government to establish a "court or courts" in addition to the district court and to prescribe the jurisdiction and procedure of these other courts; this power is not expressly limited to "inferior" courts or courts of original jurisdiction.

However, the Organic Act must be construed to give force and effect to all its provisions, and no language should be taken out of context and construed without reference to the whole territorial system established by Congress. See Carter v. Gear, 197 U.S. 348 (1905). I think Congress would have spoken more directly had it intended to enable the territorial legislature to substitute a local appellate court for the appellate division of the district court. Unlike the majority, I find it significant that section 22(a) says nothing about the transfer of appellate jurisdiction to local courts, while it expressly authorizes such a transfer of the district court's original jurisdiction. I would conclude that such a transfer of appellate jurisdiction was not authorized by Congress.

I also do not agree with the majority that the power to "determine" the appellate jurisdiction of the district court necessarily includes the power to abolish it. I think it was more likely intended to permit the local legislature to decide what cases were serious enough to be appealable. This power may be compared to that of Congress under article III to regulate the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, Congress has never tried wholly to eliminate the Court's appellate jurisdiction, and thus we cannot tell how far this power extends. Professor Hart has suggested it would not permit Congress to "destroy the essential role of the Supreme Court in the constitutional plan." Hart, The Power of Congress to Limit the Jurisdiction of Federal Courts: An Exercise in Dialectic, 66 HARV. L. REV. 1362, 1365 (1953). Similarly, I would conclude that the power of Guam to determine the appellate jurisdiction of the district court would not allow that jurisdiction to be entirely extinguished. Moreover, for Guam to abolish all appellate jurisdiction would be a wholly irresponsible legislative act, raising serious constitutional questions. It is unlikely that Congress intended to give the Guam legislature the power to commit such an act, and such intent should not be assumed in the absence of express language to that effect. To rest the validity of the Court Reorganization Act, as the majority does, on the assumption that such power validly exists, is to place the Act on a most infirm foundation.

My conclusion that Congress did not intend to authorize such a transfer of jurisdiction is supported by subsequent legislative history. In 1951, Congress amended the Organic Act to expand the Ninth Circuit's appellate jurisdiction to all final decisions of the district court, rather than the limited categories contained in the original section 23.¹ In 1958 Congress added a paragraph to section 22(a) of the Organic Act, giving explicit authorization for the three-judge appellate court procedure that had been implemented by Guam Public Law 17.² These amendments indicate a congressional purpose to sanction a prescribed system for federal court review of local court decisions. Every word of the second paragraph of the amended section 22(a) would become superfluous if Guam could remove the appellate jurisdiction of the district court. This pattern of congressional approval and acceptance cannot now be made completely moot by the Court Reorganization Act.

¹Section 23 of the Organic Act originally provided for appeal to the Ninth Circuit from final decisions of the district court involving federal law, habeas corpus, and civil cases with $5,000 in controversy; direct appeals to the Supreme Court were allowed as in 28 U.S.C. § 1252. The 1951 amendment repealed § 23, and decisions of the District Court of Guam were made reviewable in precisely the same manner as those of United States district courts under 28 U.S.C. §§ 1252, 1291-92, & 1294. Ch. 655 § 55-56, 65 Stat. 728-30.

The Court Reorganization Act makes sweeping changes in the judicial system developed in Guam over the previous 23 years. Prior to 1974, virtually all significant matters were within either the original or appellate jurisdiction of the district court, and reviewable by this court and the United States Supreme ²The amendment added the following paragraph to section 22(a):

Appeals to the District Court of Guam shall be heard and determined by an appellate division of the court consisting of three judges, of whom two shall constitute a quorum. The judge appointed for the court by the President shall be the presiding judge of the appellate division and shall preside therein unless disqualified or otherwise unable to act. The other judges who are to sit in the appellate division at any session shall be designated by the presiding judge from among the judges assigned to the court from time to time pursuant to section 1424b(a) of this title. The concurrence of two judges shall be necessary to any decision by the District Court of Guam on the merits of an appeal but the presiding judge alone may make any appropriate orders with respect to an appeal prior to the hearing and determination thereof on the merits and may dismiss an appeal for want of jurisdiction or failure to take or prosecute it in accordance with the applicable law or rules of procedure.

Pub. L. No. 85-444, 72 Stat. 178.

This amendment was described as "an additional paragraph recognizing and making suitable provisions for the appellate division of the district court as it now exists under the local law." S. Rep. No. 1582, 85th Cong., 2d Sess., 2 U.S. Code Cong. & Ad. News 2623 (1958). It was thought that this addition would "eliminate any doubt as to the status of the appellate division." Id. at 2629.

Court. Under the new system, only cases "arising under" federal law or involving the territorial income tax remain within the federal court jurisdiction; as to other matters there is no appeal beyond the Supreme Court of Guam. Important federal issues can be presented in cases which do not "arise under" federal law. See 13 C. WRIGHT, A. MILLER, & E. COOPER, FEDERAL PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE § 3562 (1975). It seems unlikely to me that Congress intended to confer on the territorial legislature the power to eliminate review in the federal court system of all claims raised in the territorial courts.³

There is no evidence in the legislative history of the Organic Act of 1950 that Congress intended section 22(a) to give the territorial legislature the option of creating a local supreme court having the power of ³My concern is particularly acute for residents of Guam who are subject to the personal jurisdiction of the local courts. Persons born in Guam are United States citizens, 8 U.S.C. § 1407, and may have important federal claims in defending actions which do not "arise under" federal law.

The majority opinion seeks to limit its holding to approve the transfer of appellate jurisdiction only for local, nonfederal cases. Such a distinction has no support in the language of section 22. The federal question wording there is a grant of original jurisdiction to the district court, and Guam is authorized to transfer original jurisdiction in "other" cases to the local courts. This restriction does not modify the clause empowering the legislature to "determine" the district court's appellate jurisdiction.

Indeed, the majority refuses to limit the potential jurisdiction of the Guam courts to nonfederal matters transferred from the district court's original jurisdiction. Their rationale would thus allow the legislature to give the local courts concurrent jurisdiction of federal questions as well. Such cases could not be removed to the federal district court, since the local courts of Guam are not state courts. 28 U.S.C. § 1441; cf. id. § 1451 (defining District of Columbia Superior Court as a "state court" for removal purposes); 48 U.S.C. § 864 (authorizing removal from courts of Puerto Rico as if they were state courts). And, as noted, no appeal is possible from the Supreme Court of Guam.

ultimate review. Earlier versions of the Organic Act included provisions for a congressionally-created supreme court for Guam; these were eliminated in favor of a federal district court.⁴ The district court was established for the purpose of providing litigants in the Western Pacific with direct access to the federal court system.⁵ Because of concern that there would not be sufficient federal question litigation to justify a separate district court in Guam, the court was given original jurisdiction in local matters. It was also envisioned that the district court would serve as an appellate body once local courts were established.⁶ The apparent reason for eliminating the provisions for a local supreme court was to avoid duplicative judicial machinery, rather than to allow local authorities to put certain controversies beyond review by the federal court system.

A comparison of Guam's judicial system with those established in other territories provides no support for the majority's view. Although there are many differences, there are indications that the system established in Guam was intended to be similar to those of the other territories.⁷ Congress assured that there would be review by article III courts of all cases in the former territories of Hawaii and Alaska and still maintains that policy for the Virgin Islands. Cases in the local courts of the Virgin Islands may be transferred or appealed to the District Court of the Virgin Islands, 48 U.S.C. § 1612, and subsequent review is authorized by Congress on the same basis as for other district courts. 28 U.S.C. §§ 1252, 1291, 1292, 1294. Congress has provided for United States Supreme Court review of decisions by the Supreme Court of Puerto Rico on virtually the same terms as for state court decisions. Compare id. § 1257 with id. § 1258. I do not think Congress intended to give Guam, of all its territories, the unchecked power to transfer appellate jurisdiction to its local courts and by the same stroke to deny review by any article III tribunal.

⁴The Interior Department's first proposal for the Guam Organic Act would have authorized both a supreme court and inferior courts in the Territory. The decisions of the supreme court would have been reviewable by the federal district court in Hawaii. See H. Rep. No. 1577, 81st Cong., 2d Sess., 2 U.S. Code Cong. Serv. 2840, 2847 (1950). H.R. 7273, 81st Cong., 2d Sess. (1950), would have provided Ninth Circuit review of decisions by the Supreme Court of Guam, and the Northern District of California would have been extended to include Guam. See also S. 1892, 81st Cong., 2d Sess. (companion bill). See generally 96 Cong. Rec. 7576-77, 11078-82 (1950). An earlier bill set up a District Court of Guam and provided only for additional courts of inferior jurisdiction. S. 185, 81st Cong., 2d Sess. (1950).

⁵See 2 U.S. Code Cong. Serv. 2840, 2843 (1950).

⁶The text of these amendments was suggested to the Senate Committee by Judge Albert B. Maris, who acted as judicial advisor to the Territory of Guam. See id. at 2852-53.

For the reasons set forth above I think that the Guam legislature's action in setting up the Supreme Court of Guam was beyond the scope of its powers under the Organic Act.

Accordingly, I respectfully dissent.

⁷See Letter of Judge Maris, id. at 2852 (analogizing judicial system for Guam to that adopted for Virgin Islands); Letter of J. A. Krug, Secretary of the Interior, id. at 2846 (original proposal for Organic Act modeled upon those of the other territories).

THE QUESTION WHETHER THE LOCAL LAW CREATING THE SUPREME COURT OF GUAM IS CONSISTENT WITH THE FEDERAL ORGANIC ACT OF GUAM IS OF SUCH IMPERATIVE PUBLIC IMPORTANCE AS TO REQUIRE IMMEDIATE SETTLEMENT IN THIS COURT.

- a. The Number of Appeals Pending In The Appellate Division Of The Federal District Court Of Guam Is Thirty-nine.

District Court of Guam

Office of the Clerk

Agana, Guam

March 11, 1976

Edward L. G. Aguon
Clerk

Post Office Box DC

Mr. Howard G. Trapp
Attorney-at-Law
P. O. Box 3367
Agana, Guam 96910

Dear Mr. Trapp:

After you requested information with regard to the number of appeals from the Superior Court of Guam currently pending before the Appellate Division of the District Court, I had my staff check the appellate docket book. As of March 1, 1976, the Appellate Division of the District Court of Guam has pending before it 27 civil appeal cases and 12 criminal appeal cases from the Superior Court of Guam.

Of the 12 criminal appeals, nine are appeals from felony convictions, one is an appeal from a misdemeanor conviction, one is an appeal by the Government of Guam on a suppression decision, and one is a juvenile court conviction.

Sincerely yours,

/s/ Edward L. G. Aguon
Edward L. G. Aguon
Clerk, District Court of Guam

- b. An additional Thirty-nine Appeals Are Pending In The Supreme Court Of Guam.

Supreme Court of Guam

Territory of Guam

Office of the Clerk

Judiciary Building

P. O. Box CT

Agana, Guam 96910

Tel. Nos. 772-6685

772-6206

11 March 1976

Mr. Howard G. Trapp
Attorney at law
Agana, Guam 96910

Dear Sir:

As per your request, the number of pending appeals with the Supreme Court of Guam, are as follows:

CRIMINAL	9
CIVIL	30
<hr/>
TOTAL	39

Sincerely,

/s/ J. Q. Uncangeo

J. Q. Uncangeo

Clerk, Supreme Court

c. Only This Court Can End Guam's Judicial Chaos.

Supreme Court of Guam
Territory of Guam

March 11, 1976

Mr. Howard Trapp, Esq.
Perez Bros. Building
P.O. Box 3367
Agana, Guam 96910

Dear Mr. Trapp:

Receipt of your letter dated March 10, 1976 is acknowledged.

As you are quite aware, it is my opinion that the Supreme Court of Guam as created by our Guam Legislature is constitutional. I am perfectly satisfied that the Legislature by virtue of the Organic Act of Guam is vested with authority to organize and re-organize our Judicial system in order to best meet the need of our territory as it develops within the framework of our American system of government.

As I explained to you, it has always been my hope and desire that the question whether creation of the Supreme Court of Guam is consistent with the Organic Act of Guam should and must be finally decided by the Supreme Court of the United States otherwise, the possibility of creating chaos in our Judicial system will continue to exist.

As you know, we have quite a number of appeal cases pending and that the 9th Circuit had ruled that the Supreme Court of Guam was legally created. In the event that we accept that ruling and the Supreme Court of Guam decides these pending cases and then in some future date the question of the legality of the creation of the Supreme Court of Guam was again challenged and taken all the way to the Supreme Court of the United States and the Supreme Court of the United States ruled otherwise, we will then be faced with a rather serious problem in having those cases reheard by the proper court, thereby causing us and everybody concerned including the litigants additional expenditures of money and time which need not take place had the question been brought before the Supreme Court of the United States in the first place.

I hope this answers your letter sufficiently.

Very truly yours,

/s/ Joaquin C. Perez
Joaquin C. Perez
Chief Justice

d. The Petition For Rehearing The Agana Bay Case Was Denied.

United States Court of Appeals
for the Ninth Circuit

No. 75-1059

Agana Bay Development Company (Hong Kong) Ltd.,	Petitioner-Appellee,
vs.
Supreme Court of Guam,	Respondent-Appellant,
Dillingham Corporation of the Pacific,	Real Party in Interest.

[Filed March 3, 1976]

ORDER DENYING PETITION FOR REHEARING AND REJECTING
SUGGESTION FOR REHEARING
EN BANC

Before: CARTER, GOODWIN and KENNEDY, Circuit
Judges.

The panel in the above entitled matter having voted to deny the petition for rehearing and Judge Goodwin having voted to reject the suggestion for rehearing en banc, and Judges Carter and Kennedy having recommended rejection of the suggestion for rehearing en banc; and copies of the petition for rehearing en banc having been circulated to all active judges and no judge having requested a rehearing en banc,

It Is Ordered that the petition for rehearing is denied and the suggestion for rehearing en banc is rejected.

- e. The Decision In Agana Bay Makes Prosecuting The Present Case In The Court Of Appeals An Exercise In Futility.
- f. Review Of The Agana Bay Case In This Court Will Not Be Sought.

(Letterhead of Law Offices
Klemm & Dear
1008 Pacific News Building
P.O. Box AB
Agana, Guam 96910)

March 11, 1976

Mr. Howard G. Trapp
Trapp, Gayle, Teker, Hammer & Lacy
P. O. Box 3367
Agana, Guam 96910

Re: Agana Bay Development Company (Hong Kong),
Ltd. vs. Supreme Court of Guam—Appeal No.
75-1059

Dear Mr. Trapp:

This letter will serve to confirm our conversation with respect to the above-entitled matter. As I indicated to you, we do not intend to present the issue to the Supreme Court. As I understand it, the merits of case have, in substance and effect, been settled by the parties and I anticipated that the original action will be dismissed pursuant to the settlement.

Very truly yours,
Klemm & Dear
/s/ J. Bradley Klemm
J. Bradley Klemm

g. Agana Bay Holds That The Guam Legislature Has Abolished This Court's Jurisdiction To Review Guam Cases.

"Prior to 1974, virtually all significant matters were within either the original or appellate jurisdiction of the district court, and reviewable by this court and the United States Supreme Court. Under the new system, only cases 'arising under' federal law or involving the territorial income tax remain within the federal court jurisdiction; as to other matters there is no appeal beyond the Supreme Court of Guam." Agana Bay Dev. Co. (Hong Kong) Ltd. v. Supreme Court of Guam, supra, No. 75-1059 (9th Cir., Jan. 14, 1976) (dissenting opinion).

CONCLUSION

In light of the foregoing a writ of certiorari should issue to review the order of dismissal of the appellate division of the federal District Court of Guam entered in this case on March 9, 1976.

Dated, Agana, Guam,
March 11, 1976.

Respectfully submitted,
HOWARD TRAPP,
Attorney for Petitioner.

(Appendices Follow)

APPENDICES

Appendix B

District Court of Guam
Territory of Guam

Civil Case No. 74-177

Agana Bay Development Company (Hong Kong) Ltd.,	Petitioner,
vs.
Supreme Court of Guam,	Respondent,
Dillingham Corporation of the Pacific,
Real Party in Interest.

[Filed Nov. 6, 1974]

OPINION

The Supreme Court of Guam, respondent herein, was established by Public Law 12-85, (Twelfth Guam Legislature), effective July 1, 1974.

On July 12, 1974, the Superior Court of Guam entered an order in the case of Dillingham Corporation of the Pacific v. Agana Bay Development Company, Civil Case No. 159-74.

The real party in interest, Dillingham Corporation of the Pacific, filed, on July 19, 1974, a notice of appeal to the Supreme Court of Guam with the Clerk of the Superior Court. On August 28, 1974, the Clerk of the Superior Court transmitted the documents filed in Civil Case No. 159-74 to the respondent Supreme Court of Guam.

Ensuing such transmittal of the record, the Acting Clerk of the Supreme Court, on August 29, 1974, notified the attorney of the real party in interest of the receipt of the record in Civil Case No. 159-74. Supreme Court Civil No. 2-74(A) was assigned to the appeal by the Supreme Court. An appellant's brief was then filed by the real party in interest in the Supreme Court of Guam on September 20, 1974.

On September 25, 1974, petitioner, Agana Bay Development Company (Hong Kong) Ltd., filed a petition in this court demanding that an alternative writ of prohibition issue from this court commanding the Supreme Court of Guam to desist and refrain from taking any further action or proceedings with regard to the appeal taken from the order of partial summary judgment in Superior Court Civil Case No. 159-74, and requiring the respondent court to show cause why a peremptory writ of prohibition should not issue restraining and prohibiting respondent court absolutely and forever from taking any further proceedings in the aforesaid appeal.

An alternative writ of prohibition was issued from this court on September 26, 1974, and respondent court was ordered to show cause before this court, on October 4, 1974, why a peremptory writ of prohibition as demanded should not issue.

On October 4, 1974, a hearing was held and the Attorney General of Guam appeared on behalf of the respondent court. Counsel for the petitioner and the real party in interest also appeared. The real party in interest offered no opposition to the petition. Guam's status as a territory, its judicial structure, and the source of its authority are basic factors relevant to a determination of the issue.

The status of Guam, as a territory and its relationship with the national government, is basically covered by the provisions of Article 4, Section 3, Clause 2, of the Constitution of the United States which provides as follows:

"The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful Rules and Regulations respecting the Territory or other property belonging to the United States; and nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to prejudice any claims of the United States, or of any particular state."

This provision of the Constitution had been properly construed in the following cases:

"The United States possess sovereignty over the territories of the United States so long as they exist under territorial government. Territory v. Burgess, 8 Mon. 57, 19 P. 558. The territories are merely political subdivisions of the outlying dominion of the United States. They bear much the same relations to the general government that counties do to the states, and Congress may legislate for them as states do for their respective municipal organizations. Cincinnati Soap Co. v. United States, 301 U.S. 308, 81 L.Ed. 1122, 57 S.Ct. 764; Talbot v. Silver Bow County, 139 U.S. 438, 35 L.Ed. 210, 11 S.Ct. 594.

Territory when acquired by treaty becomes the absolute property and domain of the U.S., subject to such conditions as the government, in its diplomatic negotiations, may see fit to accept relating to the rights of the people then inhabiting that territory . . . Congress may administer its government as it does that of the District of Columbia; it may organize a local territorial government; it may admit it as a state upon an equality with other states . . . In short, when once acquired by treaty, a territory belongs to the U.S. and is subject to the disposition of Congress. DeLima v. Bidwell, 182 U.S. 1, 45 L.Ed. 1041, 21 S.Ct. 743.

The convention which framed the Constitution of the U.S., in view of the territory already possessed and the possibility of acquiring more, inserted in that instrument, in Art. 4, Sec. 3, a grant of express power to Congress 'to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the U.S.' Dorr v. U.S., 195 U.S. 138, 49 L.Ed. 128, 24 S.Ct. 808.

Although its power is not without limits, Congress, in the government of the territories, has plenary power, Inter-Island Steam Nav. Co. v. Hawaii, 305 U.S. 306, 83 L.Ed. 187, 59 S.Ct. 202, that is to say, it has full and complete legislative authority over the people of the territories and all the departments of the territorial government. Cincinnati Soap Co. v. U.S., 301 U.S. 308, 81 L.Ed. 1122, 57 S.Ct. 764.

The supreme power of Congress over the territories and over the acts of the territorial legislatures established therein is generally expressly reserved in the organic acts establishing governments in said territories. Church of Jesus Christ of L.D.S. v. U.S., 136 U.S. 1, 34 L.Ed. 478, 10 S.Ct. 792."

"Congress has been empowered by the federal Constitution to 'make all needful Rules and Regulations respecting the Territory * * * belonging to the United States.' Therefore, it was competent for Congress to define the jurisdiction of any courts so created in a territory or to empower the territorial legislature to define such jurisdiction. But, of course, if Congress did delegate such authority to the territorial legislature, it was incumbent upon that body to stay strictly within the limits of the power granted." Bordenelli v. United States, 233 F.2d 120, 122 (9th Cir. 1956) (footnotes omitted).)

The issue before the court is whether or not the Legislature of Guam exceeded its authority under the Organic Act of 1950, as amended, when it enacted Public Law 12-85 creating the Supreme Court of Guam.

Guam obtained its present status through the Organic Act of 1950, 48 U.S.C., §§1421-1424. The Organic Act provided Guam with a civil government composed of three branches. Sections 22, 23 and 24 of the Organic Act established the District Court of Guam. As originally enacted, the Organic Act read:

"Sec. 22. (a) There is hereby created a court of record to be designated the 'District Court of Guam', and the judicial authority of Guam shall be vested in the District Court of Guam and in such court or courts as may have been or may hereafter be established by the laws of Guam. The District Court of Guam shall have, in all causes arising under the laws of the United States, the jurisdiction of a district court of the United States as such court is defined in section 451 of title 28, United States Code, and shall have original jurisdiction in all other causes in Guam, jurisdiction over which has not been transferred by the legislature to other court or courts established by it, and shall have such appellate jurisdiction as the legislature may determine. The jurisdiction of and the procedure in the courts of Guam other than the District Court of Guam shall be prescribed by the laws of Guam.

“(b) The rules heretofore or hereafter promulgated and made effective by the Supreme Court of the United States pursuant to section 2072 of title 28, United States Code, in civil cases; section 2073 of title 28, United States Code, in admiralty cases; sections 3771 and 3772 of title 18, United States Code, criminal cases; and section 30 of the Bankruptcy Act of July 1, 1898, as amended (title 11, U.S.C., sec. 53), in bankruptcy cases, shall apply to the District Court of Guam and to appeals therefrom.”

“Sec. 23. (a) The United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit shall have jurisdiction of appeals from all final decisions of the District Court of Guam in all cases involving the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States or any authority exercised thereunder, in all habeas corpus proceedings, and in all other civil cases where the value in controversy exceeds $5,000, exclusive of interest and costs.

“(b) Any party may appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States from an interlocutory or final judgment, or order of the District Court of Guam, holding an Act of Congress unconstitutional in any civil action, suit, or proceeding to which the United States or any of its agencies or any officer or employee thereof as such officer or employee is a party. A party who has received notice of appeal under this section shall take any subsequent appeal or cross appeal to the Supreme Court. All appeals or cross appeals taken to other courts prior to such notice shall be treated as taken directly to the Supreme Court.”

“Sec. 24. (a) The President shall, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint a judge for the District Court of Guam who shall hold office for the term of four years and until his successor is chosen and qualified unless sooner removed by the President for cause. The judge shall receive a salary payable by the United States which shall be the same as the salary of the Governor of Guam as provided by section 26(a) of this Act, and shall be entitled to the benefits of retirement provided in section 373 of title 28, United States Code. The Chief Justice of the United States may, with the consent of the judge so assigned, assign any United States circuit or district judge to serve as a judge in the District Court of Guam whenever it is made to appear that such an assignment is necessary for the proper dispatch of the business of the court.

“(b) The President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a United States attorney and United States marshal for Guam to whose offices the provisions of chapters

31 and 33 of title 28, United States Code, respectively, shall apply.

"...."

In 1951, Congress repealed Sections 23(a) and 23(b). Congress amended 28 U.S.C.A., §1257, to include the District Court of Guam as a court from which direct appeals could be taken to the Supreme Court of decisions invalidating Acts of Congress. Therefore, Section 23(b) was no longer necessary.

Congress also amended Sections 1291 and 1294 of Title 28 of the United States Code to provide for a direct appeal from all final decisions of the District Court of Guam to the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit. This amendment was necessary after the First Guam Legislature exercised its authority under Section 22(a) of the Organic Act and enacted Public Law 17 which gave the Island Court of Guam original jurisdiction over misdemeanor cases, civil cases in which the value in controversy did not exceed $2,000, and divorce and probate cases. This meant that the District Court had jurisdiction over felonies and civil cases over $2,000. Since Section 23(a) provided the Ninth Circuit with jurisdiction over appeals from only those final decisions of the District Court of Guam involving habeas corpus proceedings and civil cases where the value in controversy exceeded $5,000, Public Law 17, in effect, left the District Court with jurisdiction over felonies and some civil cases from which there was no appeal. This amendment corrected this situation.

In 1951, the First Guam Legislature enacted Public Law 17, which set forth the jurisdiction of the appellate division of the District Court.¹

In 1958, Congress enacted Public Law 85-444, amending Sections 22 and 24 of the Organic Act. Through Public Law 85-444, Congress recognized the existence of the appellate division of the District Court. By virtue of this amendment, Congress has officially established the Appellate Division of the District Court of Guam.

¹"Sec. 63. Appellate jurisdiction.—The District Court of Guam shall have jurisdiction of appeals from the judgments, orders and decrees of the Island Court in criminal causes as provided in the Penal Code, Part II, Title VIII, and in civil causes and proceedings as provided in the Code of Civil Procedure, Part II, Title VIII, Chapter VI, Article II, and Title XII, Chapters I and II, and Part III, Title I, Chapter V, and Title II, Chapter IV, and Title VII, Chapter XII, and the Probate Code, Division III, Chapter XXI, Article IV, and Division IV, Chapter XVI."

"Sec. 65. Appellate division.— Appeals from the Island Court shall be heard and determined by an appellate division of the District Court, consisting of three judges, of whom two shall constitute a quorum. The appellate division, when requested by the moving party, shall also hear and determine motions for rehearing or a new trial made after final decision of the District Court in all cases tried originally in that court in which such final decision is not appealable to the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit. The judge appointed for the court by the President shall be the presiding judge of the appellate division and shall preside therein unless disqualified or otherwise unable to act. The other judges who are to sit in the appellate division at any session shall be designated by the presiding judge from among the judges assigned to the court from time to time by the Chief Justice of the United States pursuant to Section 24(a) of the Organic Act of Guam. The concurrence of two judges of the appellate division shall be necessary to any decision by the District Court on the merits of an appeal but the presiding judge alone may make any appropriate orders with respect to an appeal prior to the hearing and determination thereof on the merits and may dismiss an appeal for want of jurisdiction, or failure to take or prosecute it in accordance with the applicable law or rules of procedure."

This amendment left Sections 22 and 24 of the Organic Act as they are now found in Sections 1424 and 1424b of Title 48 of the United States Code:

"THE JUDICIARY

§1424. District Court of Guam; jurisdiction; appellate division; rules of procedure

(a) There is created a court of record to be designated the 'District Court of Guam', and the judicial authority of Guam shall be vested in the District Court of Guam and in such court or courts as may have been or may hereafter be established by the laws of Guam. The District Court of Guam shall have the jurisdiction of a district court of the United States in all causes arising under the Constitution, treaties, and laws of the United States, regardless of the sum or value of the matter in controversy, shall have original jurisdiction in all other causes in Guam, jurisdiction over which has not been transferred by the legislature to other court or courts established by it, and shall have such appellate jurisdiction as the legislature may determine. The jurisdiction of and the procedure in the courts of Guam other than the District Court of Guam shall be prescribed by the laws of Guam.

Appeals to the District Court of Guam shall be heard and determined by an appellate division of the court consisting of three judges, of whom two shall constitute a quorum. The judge appointed for the court by the President shall be the presiding judge of the appellate division and shall preside therein unless disqualified or otherwise unable to act. The other judges who are to sit in the appellate division at any session shall be designated by the presiding judge from among the judges assigned to the court from time to time pursuant to section 1424b(a) of this title. The concurrence of two judges shall be necessary to any decision by the District Court of Guam on the merits of an appeal but the presiding judge alone may make any appropriate orders with respect to an appeal prior to the hearing and determination thereof on the merits and may dismiss an appeal for want of jurisdiction or failure to take or prosecute it in accordance with the applicable law or rules of procedure.

(b) The rules heretofore or hereafter promulgated and made effective by the Supreme Court of the United States pursuant to section 2072 of Title 28, in civil cases; section 2073 of Title 28, in admiralty cases; sections 3771 and 3772 of Title 18, in criminal cases; and section 53 of Title 11, in bankruptcy cases; shall apply to the District Court of Guam and to appeals therefrom; except that no provisions of any such rules which authorize or require trial by jury or the prosecution of offenses by indictment by a grand jury instead of by information shall be applicable to the District Court of Guam unless and until made so applicable by laws enacted by the Legislature of Guam, and except further that the terms 'attorney for the government' and 'United States attorney', as used in the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, shall, when applicable to cases arising under the laws of Guam, mean the Attorney General of Guam or such other person or persons as may be authorized by the laws of Guam to act therein. As amended Aug. 27, 1954, c. 1017, §1, 68 Stat. 382; June 4, 1958, Pub.L. 85-444, §§1, 2, 72 Stat. 178."

§1424b. Judge of District Court; appointment, tenure, and compensation; appointment of United States attorney and marshal; applicability of laws

(a) The President shall, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint a judge for the District Court of Guam who shall hold office for the term of eight years and until his successor is chosen and qualified unless sooner removed by the President for cause. The judge shall receive a salary payable by the United States which shall be at the rate prescribed for judges of the United States district courts.

The Chief Judge of the Ninth Judicial Circuit of the United States may assign a judge of the Island Court of Guam or a judge of the High Court of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands or a circuit or district judge of the ninth circuit, or the Chief Justice of the United States may assign any other United States circuit or district judge with the consent of the judge so assigned and of the chief judge of his circuit, to serve temporarily as a judge in the District Court of Guam whenever it is made to appear that such an assignment is necessary for the proper dispatch of the business of the court.

(b) The President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a United States attorney and United States marshal for Guam to whose offices the provisions of chapters 31 and 33 of title 28, United States Code [28 §§501-510, 541-556], respectively, shall apply.

(c) The provisions of chapters 43 and 49 of title 28, United States Code [28 §§631-639, 751-756], shall apply to the District Court of Guam.

(Aug. 1, 1950, c. 512, §24, 64 Stat. 390; Oct. 31, 1951, c. 655, §55(a), 65 Stat. 728; June 4, 1958, P.L. 85-444, §3, 72 Stat. 179.)"

Respondent contends that under the following quoted portion of Section 1424(a), Title 48, U.S.C., (Organic Act of Guam), and more specifically the italicized portion, the Guam Legislature was given the authority to set up the Supreme Court of Guam and to give it whatever jurisdiction it may determine:

"... The District Court of Guam ... shall have original jurisdiction in all other causes in Guam, jurisdiction over which has not been transferred by the legislature to other court or courts established by it, and shall have appellate jurisdiction as the legislature may determine."

This, according to respondent, gives the legislature the authority to determine which decisions of the courts of Guam will be appealed to the District Court, if any, and which decisions will be appealed to other courts created by the legislature.

It is the contention of the petitioner that the legislature could determine what rights of appeal would exist from the courts of Guam, but that where a right of appeal existed, that appeal could only be taken to the appellate division of the District Court of Guam.

The legislative history of Sections 22, 23 and 24 of the Organic Act clears up any doubt as to what Congress intended by establishing the District Court of Guam.

The original bill to provide a civil government for Guam as passed by the House of Representatives, H. R. 7273, provided Guam with a judicial system quite different from the one Guam has actually had since 1950, as reflected in what transpired in the House of Representatives when H. R. 7273 came up for consideration by said House:

"Mr. Peterson. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 7273) to provide a civil government for Guam, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

"The Clerk read the title of the bill.

"The Speaker pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

"There was no objection.

"The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

"

" 'THE JUDICIARY

" 'Sec. 22. The judicial authority of Guam shall be vested in one supreme court and in such inferior courts as may have been or hereafter may be established under the laws of Guam. The jurisdiction of such courts and the procedure therein shall be prescribed in the laws of Guam. The style of all process in the courts of Guam shall hereafter run in the name of the government of Guam, and all prosecutions shall be carried on in the name and by the authority of the government of Guam. The Governor shall not sit as a judge in any court.

" 'Sec. 23. The supreme court shall consist of a chief justice and two associate justices who shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the United States Senate, and who shall hold office for a term of 6 years and until their successors have been appointed and qualified, unless sooner removed by the President for cause. No person shall be appointed a justice of the Supreme Court of Guam who has not been a member of the bar of the highest court of a State or Territory of the United States for at least 5 years.

" 'Sec. 24. (a) The judicial district known as the Northern District of California is hereby extended to include Guam, and the jurisdiction of the United States District Court for the Northern District of California as now defined by law shall extend to the whole of such district.

" '(b) The laws of the United States relating to removal of causes as between the courts of the United States and the courts of the several States shall govern as between the United States District Court for the Northern District of California and the courts of Guam.

" '(c) For the purposes of this section, special terms of the district court shall be held in Guam at such times as the judges of that court may deem expedient.

" '(d) The United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit shall have jurisdiction of appeals from all final decisions of the Supreme Court of Guam in all cases involving the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States or any authority exercised thereunder, in all habeas corpus proceedings, and in all other civil cases where the value in controversy exceeds $5,000, exclusive of interest and costs.

“(e) Any party may appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States from an interlocutory or final judgment, decree, or order of any court of record of Guam, holding an act of Congress unconstitutional in any civil action, suit, or proceeding to which the United States or any of its agencies, or any officer or employee thereof, as such officer or employee, is a party. A party who has received notice of appeal under this section shall take any subsequent appeal or cross appeal to the Supreme Court. All appeals or cross appeals taken to other courts prior to such notice shall be treated as taken directly to the Supreme Court.

“....”

“....

“The Speaker pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

“The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

“The Speaker pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

“The bill was passed.” 96 CONG. REC. 7574-77 (1950).

Congress originally intended to provide Guam with a Supreme Court; however, the Supreme Court as proposed was not a creation of the legislature but rather a creation of Congress accompanied by numerous checks and controls. As originally proposed, the Organic Act created the Supreme Court of Guam and empowered the legislature to establish inferior courts. Federal control was maintained over the judicial system in Guam in several important respects. One, the three judges of the Supreme Court of Guam were all to be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the United States Senate. Two, a person could not be appointed to the Supreme Court of Guam, unless he had been a member of the bar of the highest court of a State or Territory of the United States for at least five years. Three, a direct appeal was made available from the Supreme Court of Guam to the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit in habeas corpus proceedings and civil cases arising under the laws of Guam in which the value in controversy exceeded $5,000. Moreover, appeals of all final decisions of the Supreme Court of Guam in cases involving the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States went not to the Supreme Court of the United States on a petition for certiorari, but rather went automatically to the U. S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit. The original Act shows that Congress intended to supervise the judicial branch of government in Guam both through the appointment of judges to the highest court in the territory and the automatic appeal provisions to the U. S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit.

When the companion bill to H. R. 7273, S. 1892, came before the United States Senate, amendments, drafted with the help of the Honorable Albert B. Maris, Chairman of the Chief Justices' Judicial Conference Committee, were proposed to Sections 22, 23 and 24. These amendments abandoned the concept of a Supreme Court of Guam and established instead the District Court of Guam:

"THE AMENDMENTS

"Hearings were held in the winter or spring by the Senate committee on S. 1892, a companion bill to H.R. 7273, as introduced. Based upon matters brought out at those hearings, amendments were made to the bill, in the discussion and drafting of which the members of the Guam Congress and the Attorney General and the Governor of Guam took full part.

"The principal amendments are as follows:

". . . .

"Sections 22, 23, and 24 provide for the creation of the District Court of Guam. This amendment has been discussed above. Its language was worked out with the Administrative Office of the United States Courts, and with the Honorable Albert B. Maris, chairman of the Chief Justice's Judicial Conference Committee.

". . . .

"REPORTS OF EXECUTIVE AGENCIES

"[T]he comments of the chairman of the Chief Justice's Judicial Conference Committee are set forth in full.

". . . .

"UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE THIRD CIRCUIT

"Philadelphia 7, Pa., July 6, 1950.

"Hon. Joseph C. O'Mahoney,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

"Dear Senator O'Mahoney: I am grateful to you for your courtesy in sending me the committee print of S. 1892, the Guam Organic Act, with the proposed amendments, submitted by the subcommittee. I am, of course, primarily interested in the provisions relating to the judiciary and I have two definite comments to make with respect to these provisions in the bill as proposed by the subcommittee.

"May I say preliminarily that I observe that it is proposed to create a district court in Guam to have Federal jurisdiction and also such local jurisdiction as may be assigned to it by the local legislature rather than to other local courts. I gather that this is being done somewhat upon the pattern of the District Court of the Virgin Islands created by section 25 of the Organic Act of the Virgin Islands (48 U. S. C. A., sec. 1405x). Under that act the district court has jurisdiction over both Federal and local cases but the local legislature is authorized to provide for the organization of a superior court to which jurisdiction over all non-Federal cases may be transferred. It happens that the Virgin Islands are in our circuit and that I have had occasion to observe the business which comes before the district court there. The fact is that the Federal business coming into the court is comparatively small, the bulk of the court's business involving local cases and the whole amount of business, both Federal and local, not providing an excessive workload for one judge.

"I would assume that the situation in Guam would be roughly analogous to that in the Virgin Islands and that the case load, both Federal and local, would not likely be much greater. If that is so the creation of a district court to consider Federal cases alone would be quite unjustified and it would be much more appropriate to confer upon the district court jurisdiction over local cases generally or over such local cases as are not assigned by the Guam Legislature to some other court created by it.

"Turning to proposed section 22(a) of the bill I note that the District Court of Guam is described as a 'United States district court.' I question whether this is an appropriate description since the court is not being created under the judiciary article of the Constitution, article III, section 1, but rather under article IV, section 3 which gives Congress power to regulate the territory of the United States. Moreover, if, as seems to me inevitable, the major business of the court will be to consider and dispose of local cases the designation is hardly apt. Furthermore, I suggest that the sounder legislative approach to the jurisdictional questions involved in this section would be to confer upon the district court original jurisdiction in all Federal causes and in all other causes in Guam except such as the legislature may assign to other courts. I would, therefore, suggest that section 22(a) read as follows:

"Sec. 22. (a) There is hereby created a [United States district] court of record to be designated the "District Court of Guam", and the judicial authority of Guam shall be vested in the District Court of Guam and in such court or courts [other than the District Court of Guam] as may have been or may hereafter be established by the laws of Guam. The District Court of Guam shall have, in all causes arising under the laws of the United States, the jurisdiction of a district court of the United States as such court is defined in section 451 of title 28, United States Code, and shall have original jurisdiction in all other causes in Guam jurisdiction over which has not been transferred by the legislature to other court or courts established by it, and shall have such [original or] appellate jurisdiction as the legislature may determine. The jurisdiction of and the procedure in the courts of Guam other than the District Court of Guam shall be prescribed by the laws of Guam.'

"....

"I trust that these suggestions may be useful.

"With kind regards, I am,

"Sincerely yours,

"Albert B. Maris."

S. REP. No. 2109, 81st Cong., 2d Sess. 5-13 (1950) (brackets, indicating deletions, and italics, indicating additions, by Maris, J.).

"The amendments of a bill in committee are fertile sources of interpretation." Sec. and Exch. Comm'n v. Robert Collier and Co., 76 F.2d 939, 941 (2d Cir. 1935) (Learned Hand, J.).

The Senate adopted the proposed amendments to Sections 22, 23 and 24 and passed Senate Bill 1892."

2"CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR GUAM

"The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 7273) to provide a civil government for Guam, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs with amendments . . . on page 18, after line 12, to strike out:

"Sec. 22. The judicial authority of Guam shall be vested in one supreme court and in such inferior courts as may have been or hereafter may be established under the laws of Guam. The jurisdiction of such courts and the procedure therein shall be as prescribed in the laws of Guam. The style of all process in the courts of Guam shall hereafter run in the name of the government of

The House of Representatives considered H. R. 7273

Guam, and all prosecutions shall be carried on in the name and by authority of the government of Guam. The Governor shall not sit as a judge in any court.

"Sec. 23. The supreme court shall consist of a chief justice and two associate justices who shall be appointed by the President of the United States by and with the advice and consent of the United States Senate, and who shall hold office for a term of 6 years and until their successors have been appointed and qualified, unless sooner removed by the President for cause. No person shall be appointed a justice of the Supreme Court of Guam who has not been a member of the bar of the highest court of a State or Territory of the United States for at least 5 years.

"Sec. 24. (a) The judicial district known as the northern district of California is hereby extended to include Guam, and the jurisdiction of the United States District Court for the Northern District of California as now defined by law shall extend to the whole of such district.

"(b) The laws of the United States relating to removal of causes as between the courts of the United States and the courts of the several States shall govern as between the United States District Court for the Northern District of California and the courts of Guam.

"(c) For the purposes of this section, special terms of the district court shall be held in Guam at such times as the judges of that court may deem expedient.

"(d) The United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit shall have jurisdiction of appeals from all final decisions of the Supreme Court of Guam in all cases involving the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States or any authority exercised thereunder, in all habeas corpus proceedings, and in all other civil cases where the value in controversy exceeds $5,000, exclusive of interest and costs.

"(e) Any party may appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States from an interlocutory or final judgment, decree, or order of any court of record of Guam, holding an act of Congress unconstitutional in any civil action, suit, or proceeding to which the United States or any of its agencies, or any officer or employee thereof, as such officer or employee, is a party. A party who has received notice of appeal under this section shall take any subsequent appeal or cross appeal to the Supreme Court. All appeals or cross appeals taken to other courts prior to such notice shall be treated as taken directly to the Supreme Court."

"And in lieu thereof to insert:

"Sec. 22. (a) There is hereby created a court of record to be designated the "District Court of Guam," and the judicial authority of Guam shall be vested in the District Court of Guam and in such court or courts as may have been or may hereafter be established by the laws of Guam. The District Court of Guam shall have, in all causes arising under the laws of the United States, the juris-

after it had been amended by the Senate and passed diction of a district court of the United States as such court is defined in section 451 of title 28, United States Code, and shall have original jurisdiction in all other causes in Guam, jurisdiction over which has not been transferred by the legislature to other court or courts established by it, and shall have such appellate jurisdiction as the legislature may determine. The jurisdiction of and the procedure in the courts of Guam other than the District Court of Guam shall be prescribed by the laws of Guam.

"(b) The rules heretofore or hereafter promulgated and made effective by the Supreme Court of the United States pursuant to section 2072 of title 28, United States Code, in civil cases; section 2073 of title 28, United States Code, in admiralty cases; sections 3771 and 3772 of title 18, United States Code, in criminal cases; and section 30 of the Bankruptcy Act of July 1, 1898, as amended (title 11, U. S. C., sec. 53), in bankruptcy cases, shall apply to the District Court of Guam and to appeals therefrom.

"Sec. 23. (a) The United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit shall have jurisdiction of appeals from all final decisions of the District Court of Guam in all cases involving the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States or any authority exercised thereunder in all habeas corpus proceedings, and in all other civil cases where the value in controversy exceeds $5,000, exclusive of interest and costs.

"(b) Any party may appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States from an interlocutory or final judgment, or order of the District Court of Guam, holding an act of Congress unconstitutional in any civil action, suit, or proceeding to which the United States or any of its agencies or any officer or employee thereof, as such officer or employee, is a party. A party who has received notice of appeal under this section shall take any subsequent appeal or cross appeal to the Supreme Court. All appeals or cross appeals taken to other courts prior to such notice shall be treated as taken directly to the Supreme Court.

"Sec. 24. (a) The President shall, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint a judge for the District Court of Guam who shall hold office for the term of 4 years and until his successor is chosen and qualified unless sooner removed by the President for cause. The judge shall receive a salary payable by the United States which shall be the same as the salary of the Governor of Guam as provided by section 26(a) of this act, and shall be entitled to the benefits of retirement provided in section 373 of title 28, United States Code. The Chief Justice of the United States may, with the consent of the judge so assigned, assign any United States circuit or district judge to serve as a judge in the District Court of Guam whenever it is made to appear that such an assignment is necessary for the proper dispatch of the business of the court.

"(b) The President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a United States attorney and United States

it complete with amendments.³

marshal for Guam to whose offices the provisions of chapters 31 and 33 of title 28, United States Code, respectively, shall apply.

"(c) The provisions of chapters 21, 41, 43, 49, and 57 of title 28, United States Code, shall apply to the District Court of Guam."

"The amendments were agreed to.

"The Presiding Officer. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and third reading of the bill.

"The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

"The bill was read the third time and passed." 96 CONG. REC. 11078-82 (1950).

³"CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR GUAM

"On Motion of Mr. Peterson, by unanimous consent, the bill (H.R. 7273) to provide a civil government for Guam, and for other purposes, together with the following amendments of the Senate thereto, was taken from the Speaker's table:

"Page 17, strike out all after line 8 over to and including line 9 on page 19 and insert:

"Sec. 22. (a) There is hereby created a court of record to be designated the 'District Court of Guam,' and the judicial authority of Guam shall be vested in the District Court of Guam and in such court or courts as may have been or may hereafter be established by the laws of Guam. The District Court of Guam shall have, in all causes arising under the laws of the United States, the jurisdiction of a district court of the United States as such court is defined in section 451 of title 28, United States Code, and shall have original jurisdiction in all other causes in Guam, jurisdiction over which has not been transferred by the legislature to other court or courts established by it, and shall have such appellate jurisdiction as the legislature may determine. The jurisdiction of and the procedure in the courts of Guam other than the District Court of Guam shall be prescribed by the laws of Guam.

"(b) The rules heretofore or hereafter promulgated and made effective by the Supreme Court of the United States pursuant to section 2072 of title 28, United States Code, in civil cases; section 2073 of title 28, United States Code, in admiralty cases; sections 3771 and 3772 of title 18, United States Code, criminal cases; and section 30 of the Bankruptcy Act of July 1, 1898, as amended (title 11, U. S. C., sec. 53), in bankruptcy cases; shall apply to the District Court of Guam and to appeals therefrom.

"Sec. 23. (a) The United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit shall have jurisdiction of appeals from all final decisions of the District Court of Guam in all cases involving the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States or any authority exercised thereunder, in all habeas corpus proceedings, and in all other

What has led to some confusion as to the status of the District Court of Guam was the failure of Congress in 1950 to include any structure for the appellate division. Perhaps, such was not necessary until 1951 when the First Guam Legislature expressed to Judge Maris, their desire to have appeals heard by a panel of three judges rather than simply the judge appointed by the President to the District Court of Guam. Consequently, the First Guam Legislature, with the advice of Judge civil cases where the value in controversy exceeds $5,000, exclusive of interest and costs.

"(b) Any party may appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States from an interlocutory or final judgment, or order of the District Court of Guam, holding an Act of Congress unconstitutional in any civil action, suit, or proceeding to which the United States or any of its agencies or any officer or employee thereof as such officer or employee is a party. A party who has received notice of appeal under this section shall take any subsequent appeal or cross appeal to the Supreme Court. All appeals or cross appeals taken to other courts prior to such notice shall be treated as taken directly to the Supreme Court.

"Sec. 24. (a) The President shall, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint a judge for the District Court of Guam who shall hold office for the term of four years and until his successor is chosen and qualified unless sooner removed by the President for cause. The judge shall receive a salary payable by the United States which shall be the same as the salary of the Governor of Guam as provided by section 26(a) of this Act, and shall be entitled to the benefits of retirement provided in section 373 of title 28, United States Code. The Chief Justice of the United States may, with the consent of the judge so assigned, assign any United States circuit or district judge to serve as a judge in the District Court of Guam whenever it is made to appear that such an assignment is necessary for the proper dispatch of the business of the court.

"(b) The President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a United States attorney and United States marshal for Guam to whose offices the provisions of chapters 31 and 33 of title 28, United States Code, respectively, shall apply.

"(c) The provisions of chapters 21, 41, 43, 49, and 57 of title 28, United States Code, shall apply to the District Court of Guam.

"When, on motion of Mr. Peterson, said Senate amendments were concurred in." H. R. Jour., 81st Cong. 2d Sess. 683-84 (1950).

Maris, who acted as judicial advisor to the territory, was compelled to develop a structure and procedure for the appellate division of the District Court. The legislature enacted Public Law 17.

However, Congress acted to legitimize the structure and improve the procedure of the appellate division in 1958. See 28 U. S. C. A., §1424 and §1424b. The comments of Judge Maris, addressed to the Chairman of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, are very enlightening.

"UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE THIRD CIRCUIT

Philadelphia, Pa., March 14, 1957.

"Hon. Clair Engle,

Chairman, Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

"Dear Congressman Engle: May I write you in support of H.R. 4215, the bill to amend sections 22 and 24 of the Organic Act of Guam with respect to the district court of that Territory. Having spent 7 weeks on Guam in 1951 as a judicial adviser to the Territorial government in the study and revision of the local laws relating to the judiciary, I acquired a firsthand knowledge of judicial problems and procedure of the island. The knowledge thus gained I have endeavored to keep up to date by contacts and correspondence, and I am happy to submit the following comments on the bill in the light of that knowledge and experience.

"....

"Section 22(a) of the Organic Act of Guam also provides that the district court shall have such appellate jurisdiction as the legislature may determine. The local judiciary act, Public Law 17, First Guam Legislature, 1951, which was passed when I was out there, conferred upon the district court broad appellate jurisdiction to review the decisions of the island court of Guam, an inferior court established under the prior naval rule which was continued by that act with municipal, domestic relations, and probate-court jurisdiction. In line with the Guamanian request for a procedure in which appeals would be considered by a court of 3 judges, which as they pointed out is the traditional American method, the local act provided for an appellate division of 3 judges, the regular judge of the court and 2 other judges to be assigned to the court by the Chief Justice of the United States under section 24(a) of the organic act. This appellate division has functioned heretofore through the assignment to it by the Chief Justice of the two district judges from Hawaii. See Eiban v. Government of Guam (115 F.Supp. 519).

"Section 2 of the bill would incorporate into section 22(a) of the organic act an additional paragraph recognizing and making suitable procedural provisions for the appellate division of the district court as it now exists under the local law. This will eliminate any doubt as to the status of the appellate division and will make it available to be designated hereafter as the appellate court for the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, a course which would seem logical and in the public interest since Guam is centrally located in the trust territory area. Congress undoubtedly intended the District Court of Guam to be a judicial bastion of American law and justice in the western Pacific area. The appellate division of the court admirably serves that purpose by providing in that area an appellate tribunal of the accepted American type conveniently accessible to litigants.

"

"Sincerely yours,

"Albert B. Maris."

S. REP. NO. 1582, 85th Cong. 2d Sess. (1958), 1958 U.S. Code & Admin. News 2628-30 (emphasis added).

In Judge Maris' opinion, Congress undoubtedly intended the District Court of Guam to be a judicial bastion of American law and justice in the Western Pacific area.

Congress intended to replace their original concept of a Supreme Court of Guam with the District Court of Guam and let the District Court be the appellate court for all other courts established by the legislature. It was never Congress' intention that a court, other than one established by itself, would be the highest court in the Territory of Guam.

What caused Congress to abandon the proposal for the Supreme Court of Guam and to pattern Guam's judicial system after that of the Virgin Islands was probably a matter of practicality. In the original proposal, Guam would have been placed in the Northern District of California. To expect parties to litigate Federal cases in a forum more than 5,000 miles from their situs would have been impractical if not grossly unreasonable. Moreover, one of the principal purposes of the Organic Act was to provide American business enterprise in the area with a center and a court which would provide the full protection of American laws and legal procedure. The District Court in Hawaii was too distant to serve this purpose.⁴

Yet, as pointed out by Judge Maris in his letter of July 6, 1950, addressed to the Honorable Joseph C. O'Mahoney, a Federal court in Guam would have very little business. Consequently, Congress devised the plan to establish a court which would have combined local and Federal jurisdiction but with the provision that the Legislature of Guam would determine the extent of the District Court's local jurisdiction.

The respondent contends that the Legislature has the authority to vest the appellate jurisdiction of the District Court in another court, a court of its own ⁴"A detailed sectional analysis of H.R. 7273 is set forth in the appendix. Three points, however, may require further explanation.

.
Another section to which the Senate committee devoted considerable time and thought was that concerning the establishment of a court system on Guam.

Given a period of peace, the growth of Guam as a transportation and commercial center for American interests in the Far East seems almost a foregone conclusion. American business enterprise in the area will want, and need, a center in which it can have the full protection of American laws and legal procedure.

Formerly this need was supplied by the United States Court for China, which had its headquarters in Shanghai, but that court was abolished by the treaty with China ending extraterritoriality. The nearest American court to far eastern economic centers is that in Hawaii, which is 12 or more hours away from Guam by air. If Guam is to afford American business enterprise the protection and stability needed, a court in Guam which will have on-the-spot jurisdiction in matters involving admiralty and business reorganization is clearly indicated" U.S. Code Congressional Service, 81st Congress, Second Session, 1950, P. 2843.

creation. If one accepts respondent's argument then it must necessarily follow that since its inception under the Organic Act, the legislature has had the authority to vest appellate jurisdiction in a court of its own creation, such as the respondent court, determine the appointment process of the judges of such court, and fix the qualifications of the judges of such court. Such a result is not logical given the fact that Sections 22, 23 and 24 of the Organic Act as originally introduced and passed by the House of Representatives established a Supreme Court of Guam with three justices, appointed by the President of the United States with the advice and consent of the U. S. Senate. Furthermore, the House set minimum qualifications for the justices. Even in the draft of a proposed Organic Act prepared by the Department of the Interior in 1949, Guam was given a Supreme Court consisting of one judge, appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the United States Senate. It is also interesting to note that the United States District Court for the District of Hawaii had appellate jurisdiction over final judgments of the Supreme Court of Guam in certain classes of cases.⁵

⁵"DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington 25, D.C., May 3, 1949.

Hon. Alben W. Barkley,
President of the Senate.

My Dear Mr. President:

The judicial branch would consist of a supreme court, with a single justice appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate for a 6-year term, and of such inferior courts as the legislature might create. The judicial district of Hawaii would be extended to include Guam so that the United States District Court for the District of Hawaii would have jurisdiction

Moreover, until 1950, Guam had not developed to the level that it could maintain a civil government. The Organic Act provided Guam with its first civil government. A Governor, appointed to serve a four-year term by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States, served as the executive. In case of a vacancy in the Office of Governor, the Secretary of Guam, also appointed by the President, assumed the powers and duties of the Governor.

All bills enacted by the legislature were subject to the Governor's veto. However, the Governor's veto could be overridden by a $\frac{2}{3}$ majority vote of the legislature. If a bill were so overridden, it was then sent to the President who had complete veto power over the bill.⁶

In short, in 1950, Guam was an underdeveloped and isolated possession of the United States which had been ravaged by four years of war, including almost over certain cases arising in Guam. It would review final judgments of the Supreme Court of Guam in certain classes of cases.

....
Sincerely yours,

J. A. Krug,
Secretary of the Interior."

⁶§1423i. Approval of bills.

.... When a bill is returned by the Governor to the legislature with his objections, the legislature shall enter his objections at large on its journal and proceed to reconsider it. If after such reconsideration, two-thirds of the legislature agree to pass it, it shall be sent to the Governor. If he then approves it, he shall sign it; if not, he shall within ten days transmit it to the President of the United States. If the President of the United States approves it, he shall sign it. If he shall not approve it, he shall return it to the Governor so stating, and it shall not be a law. If he neither approves it nor disapproves it within ninety days from the date of transmittal to him by the Governor, it shall be a law in like manner as if he had signed it. . . ." Aug. 1, 1950, c. 512, §19, 64 Stat. 389.

three years of enemy occupation. The Organic Act gave Guam a measure of self-government but that measure of self-government did not include the power to create a Supreme Court of Guam and to vest it with appellate jurisdiction, thus destroying the right to take a direct appeal from Guam to the U. S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit. The Organic Act established an executive branch of government and a legislative branch of government, both subject to the President through his appointment power and his veto power. Congress has never delegated to the legislature the authority to establish an independent judiciary.

If the respondent's contention is accepted, then Congress must have intended in 1950 to give the legislature the power to establish a Supreme Court, the decisions of which could not be appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States. 28 U. S. C. A., §1257, provides the method and procedure of appealing from the final judgments or decrees rendered by the highest court of a State to the Supreme Court. At the time of the enactment of the District of Columbia Court Reform and Criminal Procedure Act of 1970, Congress amended §1257 to include the District of Columbia Court of Appeals within the term "highest court of a State." In 1961, Congress added §1258 of Title 28 to the United States Code to provide a method and procedure for appeals from the decisions of the Supreme Court of Puerto Rico to the Supreme Court of the United States.

As created by the legislature, the Supreme Court of Guam is a court which will hear appeals on all final decisions involving actions arising under the laws of Guam, yet the decisions of the Supreme Court will not be reviewable by any other court. It is illogical to assume that Congress intended such a result when it created a civil government for Guam, i.e., that party litigants in Guam should have their rights of judicial review sharply curtailed rather than strengthened.

The Organic Act of Guam was modeled after the organic act of other territories.

"DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington 25, D.C., May 3, 1949.

Hon. Alben W. Barkley,
President of the Senate.

My Dear Mr. President:

In accordance with that recommendation, the enclosed draft of organic legislation for Guam has been prepared, in consultation with the Department of the Navy. The bill is modeled upon the organic acts of the other Territories. It would provide for a local government consisting of the traditional three branches, executive, legislative, and judicial, to be under the supervision of such civilian department or agency as the President may direct.

. . . .
Sincerely yours,

J. A. Krug,
Secretary of the Interior."

Other territories have had Supreme Courts, but those courts have been created by Congress and accompanied by numerous limitations.

Congress established a supreme court and circuit courts for the Territory of Hawaii in 1900. The appointment of the justices and judges of such courts was made by the President with the advice and consent of the U. S. Senate. 48 U. S. C. A., §631. Until 1948, appellate jurisdiction for the courts of Hawaii rested with the U. S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit. 48 U. S. C. A., §645.

Alaska did not obtain a Supreme Court until statehood. Prior to that, the judicial authority in the Territory of Alaska lay in the District Court for the District of Alaska. 48 U. S. C. A., §101.

When the United States acquired Puerto Rico in 1898, the territory already had a viable civil government. The court system as it existed was adopted including the Supreme Court of Puerto Rico. However, the President of the United States appointed the chief justice and the associate justices of the supreme court. 48 U. S. C. A., §861. After Puerto Rico became a commonwealth in 1952, a right of appeal existed from the Supreme Court of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico to the Court of Appeals of the First Circuit. At the time, the Court of Appeals had jurisdiction to review cases which presented Federal or non-Federal question: In practice, however, in cases involving non-Federal questions, the Court of Appeals would not reverse the Supreme Court of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico upon a point of local law unless the decision was "inescapably wrong or patently erroneous." In 1961, Congress eliminated this limitation on the Supreme Court of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico with enactment of Public Law 87-189, which gave the Supreme Court the same status as the highest court of any State of the United States. U. S. Code Congressional and Administrative News, 87th Congress, First Session, 1961, pages 2448-2451.

The judicial system for the Territory of the Virgin Islands was established by Congress before the enactment of the Organic Act of Guam. According to Judge Maris in his letter of July 6, 1950, addressed to Senator Joseph C. O'Mahoney, the District Court of Guam was patterned somewhat upon the District Court of the Virgin Islands. Under the Organic Act of the Virgin Islands, the District Court is superior to all other courts established or hereafter established by local law. 48 U. S. C. A., §1405x.

For almost all important matters, jurisdiction lies solely in the District Court, 48 U. S. C. A., §1406. The courts created by local law have only concurrent jurisdiction with the District Court with regard to certain misdemeanors and very minor civil cases. In effect, the Virgin Islands has less authority to alter its judicial system than does Guam. A movement has been underway in the Virgin Islands to influence Congress to amend the Organic Act of the Virgin Islands and provide the territory with a judicial system similar to that provided Guam in its Organic Act. This plan has been formulated with the participation of Senior United States Circuit Judge Albert Branson Maris.²

²Court Modernization in the Virgin Islands by John B. Marsh, JUDICATURE, VOL. 58, No. 2, August-September 1974, P. 86.

Nowhere in the history of the various territories of the United States has the respondent shown that Congress has granted a territory the power to establish a Supreme Court or to deny the people of that territory recourse to the Supreme Court of the United States. In no known instance has a Supreme Court of a territory been established other than by an Act of Congress.

In light of the legislative history of the Organic Act of Guam and the Organic Acts of the various other territories, the phrase "and shall have such appellate jurisdiction as the legislature may determine" must be interpreted to mean that the legislature has the power to determine from which decisions of the territorial courts a right of appeal exists. However, if the legislature creates a right of appeal, such appeal must lie with the District Court of Guam, and from there to the U. S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit and on to the Supreme Court of the United States.

The Organic Act serves as a Constitution for Guam. As such, it creates the appellate court for the territory but gives the legislature the power to determine what decisions are appealable, the appellate powers of the District Court, and the procedure for taking appeals. The legislature has so provided in Sections 63-67 of the Guam Code of Civil Procedure.

It is not the position of this court that Congress is against the establishment of a Supreme Court. Congress may at this time favor the creation of a supreme court, but it is incumbent upon the legislature and the people of Guam to seek the approval of Congress through an amendment to the Organic Act.

It is the finding of this court that all sections of Public Law 12-85, pertaining to the Supreme Court of Guam or the Chief Justice or Associate Justices of the Supreme Court, or which divest in any way the appellate jurisdiction of this court including, but not limited to, Section 2; Section 3, with the exception of those provisions which are added to the Code of Civil Procedure in Sections 64, 66, 67 and 68; Section 12 with regard to the inclusion of the Chief Justice in the Judicial Council; Section 14, with regard to the reference to the Chief Justice; Sections 17, 26, 27, 28, 29, 32, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 41, 42, 43, and 44; the references to the justices of the Supreme Court in Section 46; and the sentence referring to the Supreme Court in Section 55 are null and void.

During the pendency of the expected appeal on this decision, final decisions and decrees of the Superior Court of Guam shall be appealed to the District Court in accordance with the rules of appellate procedure promulgated by the Judicial Council on June 1, 1962.

Petitioner is hereby granted his relief.

Let Judgment issue.

Dated this 4th day of November, 1974.

/s/ Cristobal C. Duenas
Cristobal C. Duenas,
Judge, District Court of Guam

IN THE SUPREME COURT
of the
UNITED STATES

October Term, 1975

No. 75-1362

EDMOND J. OLSEN,

Petitioner,

vs.

THE PEOPLE OF THE TERRITORY OF GUAM,

Respondent.

BRIEF IN OPPOSITION TO PETITION FOR CERTIORARI

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL
TERRITORY OF GUAM
CHARLES H. TROUTMAN
Attorney General
P. O. Box DA
Agaña, Guam 96910

Attorney for Respondent.

April 7, 1976

SUBJECT INDEX

	Page
Statement of the Case	2
Reasons for Denying the Writ	4
1. Rule 19 provides that Writ is not a matter of right and is to be granted only where there are special and important reasons therefor	4
2. Answer to Petitioner's (assumed) reason for granting Writ	6
Conclusion	9

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES CITED

CASES	Pages
Agana Bay Development Co. (Hong Kong) Ltd. v. Supreme Court of Guam; Dillingham Corp. of the Pacific, Real Party in Interest, No. 75-1059, 9th Cir. (1976)	2, 9
City of Panama v. Phelps, 101 U.S. 453, 25 L.Ed. 1061, 1064	5
The American Insurance Co. v. 356 Bales of Cotton, 26 U.S. 511, 7 L.Ed. 242 (1828)	6

STATUTES

48 U.S.C.A. (Organic Act of Guam) Section 1424(a)	5,6,7,8,9 7,8
Guam Public Law 12-85	3
Guam Public Law 1-17	8

RULES OF THE SUPREME COURT

Rule 19	4
---------------	---

IN THE SUPREME COURT

of the

UNITED STATES

October Term, 1975

No. 75-1362

EDMUND J. OLSEN,

Petitioner,

vs.

THE PEOPLE OF THE TERRITORY OF GUAM,

Respondent.

BRIEF IN OPPOSITION TO PETITION FOR CERTIORARI

2
STATEMENT OF THE CASE

The sole issue presented by Edmund J. Olsen, Petitioner, to this Court is whether the Guam Legislature has the power to create a Supreme Court of Guam, or whether all appeals from the Superior Court of Guam must be brought before the Appellate Division of the District Court of Guam. Petitioner's conviction is not an issue in Petitioner's Petition before this Court.

After conviction, the Petitioner appealed simultaneously and by the same pleading to both the Supreme Court of Guam and to the Appellate Division of the District Court of Guam, since, at that time, the case of Agana Bay Development Co. (Hong Kong) Ltd. v. Supreme Court of Guam; Dillingham Corp. of the Pacific, Real Party in Interest, No. 75-1059, 9th Circuit Court of Appeals, Jan 14, 1976 was on appeal and not decided. After the decision in the above case affirming the power of the Guam Legislature to create such a Supreme Court, and its existence, the Appellate Division of the District Court dismissed the appeal before it in the instant case for lack of jurisdiction since the Guam Legislature had, by Public Law (Guam) 12-85, transferred all appellate jurisdiction to the Supreme Court of Guam.

If this petition for a Writ of certiorari is denied, or this Court affirms the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals, Petitioner having filed a timely notice of Appeal to the Supreme Court of Guam, will have his whole case reviewed by this Court.

At the present time no court on Guam is hearing appeals from the Superior Court of Guam because the District Court is following the Decision of the 9th Circuit Court and the Supreme Court of Guam does not wish to hear any cases until its existence is finally determined.

REASONS FOR DENYING THE WRIT

1. RULE 19 PROVIDES THAT WRIT IS NOT A MATTER OF RIGHT AND IS TO BE GRANTED ONLY WHERE THERE ARE SPECIAL AND IMPORTANT REASONS THEREFOR.

In Supreme Court Rule 19 the Court states several reasons for the Court considering granting a Writ of Certiorari. The Petitioners have stated no special reason for the granting of such a Writ. Petitioners have not stated that:

- a. A State (Territorial) court has decided as Federal questions of substance an issue not previously determined by this Court.
- b. A court of appeals has rendered a decision which would be in conflict with the decision of another court of appeals on the same matter; the court of appeals has decided an important state or territorial question in conflict with state or territorial law; or has decided an important question of federal law which has not been, but should be, settled by this Court; or has decided a federal question in a way to conflict with applicable decisions of this Court; or has acted in a manner to call on this Court's supervisory powers.

The 9th Circuit Court of Appeals decided that the Organic Act of Guam permitted the Legislature of Guam to create its own appellate system of courts, or a court, because this Act, in granting this power, was broader in its grant of powers to the territorial legislature than were previous Organic Acts which governed former territories, or existing ones.

That Congress has the power to prescribe the jurisdiction of territorial courts, or to delegate that power to the local legislature is supported by the cases of City of Panama, v. Phelps, 101 U.S. 453, 25 L.Ed. 1061, 1064 and

The American Insurance Co. v. 356 Bales of Cotton, 26 U.S. 511, 7 L.Ed. 242 (1828). Both cases state the proposition that Congress may permit a territory to create its own tribunals, or may specify them in the applicable Organic Act. In the former case, the Opinion of the Court states:

" . . . ; and in organizing Territories Congress may establish tribunals for the exercise of such (admiralty) jurisdiction, or they may leave it to the Legislature of the Territory to create such tribunals."

2. ANSWER TO PETITIONER'S (ASSUMED) REASON FOR GRANTING WRIT.

While Petitioner has not stated any specific reason for the Court's granting the Writ, it is assumed that the reason is that this is a matter of such importance as to require this Court to review it. While it appears that Congress has not, previous to the Organic Act of Guam, granted to a territory the right to create its own appellate system if it desires, there is no question that Congress may do so, and has, in the cases cited above, used its discretion in opposing directions in two different territories in providing for admiralty jurisdiction (a federal jurisdiction) in two territories. In Florida, power was given over this matter to the local legislature to create the proper courts to hear Admiralty cases. In the territory of Washington, the Congress provided the District Court, created by the Organic Act, with this jurisdiction. Under the Organic Act of Guam, Congress provided that the Appellate Division of the District Court (the federal court for Guam) should have whatever appellate jurisdiction the Legislature of Guam should determine, and that the Judicial Power of Guam should be exercised by the District Court "and" any court or courts organized by the Guam Legislature (48 U.S.C.A. Sec. 1424(a)). Both the District Court and any courts the local legislature may establish were given the same equal share of the "Judicial Power" of Guam.

After the Guam Legislature had created, by Guam P.L. 1-17, an Appellate Division of the District Court, pursuant to its powers granted to it by 48 U.S.C.A. Sec. 1424(a), Congress amended said by providing a procedure, in the Organic Act, whereby appeals could be taken to this Appellate Division and, thereby, ratifying the action of the Guam Legislature. Said amendment does not require appeals to be heard by said Appellate Division, but only sets a procedure for such appeals as may be heard by it. The new paragraph begins:

"Appeals to the District Court of Guam shall be heard. . ."

The various Appendices to the Petition for a Writ of Certiorari show clearly that the final version of the Organic Act differed considerably from that proposed by the Department of Interior, which proposal was said by them to be similar to previously enacted Organic Acts. The Organic Act of Guam as passed is unique in the powers it gives to the local territorial authorities.

CONCLUSION

The Decision by the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals correctly decided the issue before this Court in the Agana Bay case (No. 75-1059, 9th CA, 1-14-76) based upon sound precedent and clear statutes. No local statutes were overturned and the decision did not contradict any previous federal court decisions. This court has recognized and upheld the power of Congress to permit territorial legislatures to create territorial courts to hear what may be "federal jurisdiction" cases in states. The Decision of the 9th CA shows clearly that Guam has the power under its Organic Act to create a Supreme Court and to deprive the District Court of its local appellate jurisdiction, which was first granted to it by the Guam Legislature.

While it is true that this issue must be decided as soon as possible to permit Guam to have a court to which cases from the Superior Court may be appealed, such a resolution will come just as quickly by a denial of the Writ of Certiorari as by a full review of the issue by this Court.

Finally, if Congress wishes to create a route of appeal from the Supreme Court of Guam to an Article III court, it has every right and power to do so. A law which would accomplish this was introduced into the House of Representatives during this Congress.

The petitioner having failed to establish any error in the decision of the 9th Circuit Court, and having failed to state any other reasons why a Writ of Certiorari should be granted, his petition should be denied.

Respectfully submitted,

Charles H. Troutman

CHARLES H. TROUTMAN
Attorney General
Territory of Guam

Attorney for Respondent.

In the Supreme Court
OF THE
United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1975

No. 75-1362

EDMUND J. OLSEN,
Petitioner,

VS.

THE PEOPLE OF THE TERRITORY OF GUAM,
Respondent.

On Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the
United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

REPLY BRIEF

HOWARD TRAPP,
Post Office Box 3367,
Agana, Guam 96910.
Attorney for Petitioner.

In the Supreme Court

OF THE
United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1975

No. 75-1362

EDMUND J. OLSEN,
Petitioner,

VS.

THE PEOPLE OF THE TERRITORY OF GUAM,
Respondent.

On Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the
United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

REPLY BRIEF

DENIAL OF THE WRIT WOULD ONLY PROLONG
GUAM'S JUDICIAL CHAOS

Respondent concedes that "at the present time no court on Guam is hearing appeals from the Superior Court of Guam because . . . the Supreme Court of Guam does not wish to hear any cases until its existence is finally determined," Opposing Brief 3, and that the "issue must be decided as soon as possible to permit Guam to have a court to which cases from the Superior Court may be appealed," Opposing Brief 10, but then argues that "such a resolution will come just as quickly by a denial of the Writ of Certiorari as by full review of the issue by this Court." Opposing Brief 10.

Of course this is not so.

"A simple order denying a petition for a writ of certiorari is not designed to reflect the Court's views either as to the merits of the case or as to its jurisdiction to hear the matter. The Court has frequently reiterated that 'the denial of a writ of certiorari imports no expression of opinion upon the merits of the case, as the bar has been told many times.'" R. STERN & E. GRESSMAN, SUPREME COURT PRACTICE § 5.7 at 213-14 (1969) (footnote omitted).

If the writ is denied petitioner will have no choice but to pursue his appeal in the court of appeals and, if unsuccessful, petition this Court once more.

Dated, Agana, Guam,
April 8, 1976.

Respectfully submitted,
HOWARD TRAPP,
Attorney for Petitioner.